Catching Only The Big Ones There are no fish in the markets. Local fishermen say that fishing has been especially difficult, because the fish they catch are very small. Now the city's seafood restaurants are closed until the big fish return. 3. Speak » Match the opinions with each news story in exercise 2. Tell your partner your opinion. a. 8. Read » Read this article by Dr Ramón García about biodiversity and forests. Check your answers to the quiz in exercise 7.

There are many reasons why we need to protect our forests. They make the landscape beautiful and they are home to great biological diversity. Forests contain 80% of all the world's biodiversity and are the natural habitat of animals, plants and micro-organisms. In addition, this diversity provides important natural resources that sustain our lives by releasing oxygen, absorbing CO₂, preventing soil erosion, conserving water and moderating temperatures. Sadly, the growth of the human population and our needs for housing, fuel, paper, food and many other things have a negative impact on the forests of the world. According to FAO*, the world loses 13 million hectares of forest every year.

We need to support good practices that protect and restore forests by reducing the demand for paper, creating protected natural reserves, controlling agricultural development, and stopping illegal mining and logging. However, the most powerful way to achieve all these solutions is by educating people. We need to understand that the exploitation of forests can bring immediate benefits now, but it will destroy opportunities for future generations.
